FAR INFRARED SAUNA ROOM

An Infrared Sauna is a device used to create radiant heat from a spectrum of light through a process called conversion. The spectrum of infrared light used in an Infrared Sauna is 7-14 microns which is the same radiant heat emitted from the earth, but is only a small and highly beneficial segment of the light spectrum emitted from the sun. The infrared segment of light occurs just below the visible level and has the ability to penetrate the body up to 3 inches where it converts into heat for deeper detoxification and other healing benefits.

TRADITIONAL STEAM SAUNA

Each of these Finnish saunas features a classic heating stove with a supply of rocks. The rocks are placed in the stove to work in tandem with the electricity to maintain a deep, thorough heat. Once the rocks reach the desired temperature, pour water over the rocks to create steam. Although the basic operation is quite traditional, technology abounds with the inclusion of an internal temperature control and a timer.
This tried-and-true traditional Finnish sauna will bring you years of comfort.
